

Mr. Mixer Professional 6000HD, Proline 7Qt, and 8Qt. Commercial 1.3HP DC Units

- All of the DC powered models are of the same family and use all of the same internal components and the main difference between the models are the trim packages associated with each, for example the 6000hd has the tulip bowl, and the 8qt is rated for commercial use. If you have the above mentioned units the following videos will be helpful for servicing, diagnosing and repairing your machine! We discuss all of the gears and supplies in the video series, we show the full disassembly of the gears/transmission parts and supplies will be linked below! There are some minor discrepancies in the electronics (different speed board, they will be linked below).

Regrease

These DC powered units don't often require much grease, its acceptable to add a small amount from time to time, but as a whole the motor and transmission was designed to be replaced as a unit and not to be serviced. This is evident by the fact that they do not offer the individual gears or motor/transmission components. Luckily for you, I am a hoarder and have a pile of them saved up from repairs, contact us to inquire about gears/individual components. mrmixer316@gmail.com
